CHARLES-TOWN.

In our Gazette of the 11*th Instant, we gave an Account of some of the Transactions betwixt this Government and the* Creek Nation of Indians, since which we have been favoured with the Conferences of the Succeeding Day, viz. of May 31*ſt.*

GOVERNOR.

I GAVE great attention to all that you ſaid yeſterday, and I and my beloved men were well pleaſed therewith: But there was ſome things that you took time to conſider of, and to which you promiſed an anſwer. I preſume you are now come prepared with one; but previouſly to your giving it, I muſt obſerve to you, that there is one thing in which I think you miſtook my meaning: You ſeemed to have apprehended, that the faults of a few private perſons had been laid to the charge of the nation, and you anſwered, that it would be very hard, that the headmen of the nation ſhould be accuſed of what they neither conſented to nor approved of, and indeed could have no knowledge of: Your anſwer was a very wiſe one, but we were very far from accuſing your nation; we complained to your nation of the offences of thoſe private perſons, and we demanded ſatisfaction, that is, that they ſhould be puniſhed; had you declined or denied giving us that ſatisfaction, you would then have made their faults your own, but you puniſhed them as they deſerved without delay, which was all the ſatisfaction we could expect, therefore that affair is never more to be ſpoken of, and I now wait for your anſwer to the other matters.

MALATCHI. WITHOUT the leaſt doubt, you always look upon us and conſider us as your friends: Our nation is divided into three parts, that is, we live upon three different rivers, viz. the Cawetà's, the Abbecoe's, and the Talapoſſee's, and as a proof that we are your friends, we are all now come down; but after all the trouble you have taken, we fear it will prove ineffectual.

As you had recommended a peace to us, we took notice of it, and expected that the other party would have done the ſame, and would have met us to have confirmed it in your preſence; if they had, we ſhould gladly have agreed to what your excellency recommended: But I want to know the reaſon why they did not come as you had ordered? We, agreeably to your excellency's recommendation about a peace, called the headmen together, and they were all willing to agree to the peace; but perhaps the Cherokee's may have reaſons for not coming. We have pretty good authority to ſay, that it was they that murdered two white men near the Coſawe's and we acquainted your agent with this, and deſired him to write it to your excellency, and we expected that an anſwer would have been ſent him, and in that anſwer that you would have told us what had been done to the Cherokee's: This fault of theirs, I fancy, is the reaſon they are not come down; they ſurely are conſcious of having done ſomething they cannot anſwer, and are afraid to come; for my part I cannot dive into any other reaſon, but this is only my own ſuſpicion, and no doubt your excellency knows the true reaſon better than I.

I have conſidered within myſelf, that this is not the firſt time that your excellency has made a peace between us and the Cherokee's, but it did not laſt long. No doubt they accuſe the Creek's as being the firſt aggreſſors, but it is not ſo, for the Cherokee's always break the peace; and as a proof of it, when this peace was recommended to us by your agent, we obſerved we would not go out to war, tho' in the mean time many of our people: And as a further proof that we are willing to live in peace with our neighbours is well known, that ever ſince we made peace with the Catawbaw's, we have never broke it; we are a faithful people and can be depended upon, but as to the Cherokee's I do not know what to make of them; when people promiſe, they ſhould be careful of their words, but their promiſes cannot be depended upon.

When we arrived at Fort Moore, where we expected to have met the Cherokee's and found that they were not come, a great many thoughts occurred to me, and they were not merely my own ſuſpicions or fancies, for there we met one Cherokee man, and diſcourſe had a good deal of converſation; and when he told me that moſt of the Cherokee's were inclined to a peace, but that there were two towns, which lay backwards, that were averſe to it, and would not hearken to it; but as I had no other authority but that Cherokee man, I do not think it is much to be regarded, but will entirely depend upon your excellency's information; tho' I muſt think that it would be in vain to make a peace, while any one town was to be at war, for unleſs the whole nation ſhould be unanimous a peace will not be practicable: But all thoſe matters are entirely ſubmitted to your excellency.

As to what you mention concerning making a peace with all the Northern Indians, who live upon this land, we are friends to the Engliſh, we think your excellency's propoſal and think it a thing to be deſired, and are willing to enter into a peace. It will be very difficult to bring about, will take a long time to effect, but we leave it to your excellency; but while the Cherokee's are at war with the Northern Indians to come thro' their towns to war upon us, ſuch a peace cannot take place. I have often conſidered within myſelf and us, but as they are I do not know what to ſay to it, and know what they may be at preſent doing and whatever the Cherokee's may propoſe to making a peace. I learnt from the Cherokee that before, that there were ſo Northern gone from their nation, intending to go to war againſt and 70 more againſt us or the Chickaſaws, and tho' the Cherokee's pretend now to be friends to the Creeks, yet they ſhew more favour to the Northern Indians, and as I do not at preſent know what they are now doing in our nation; therefore be anſwerable that it will be a firm peace when I return. I have conſidered ſeriouſly what the Cherokee told me, for they

As the remainder of Malatchi's ſpeech relates to another province it is not thought proper to print it; the Governor however anſwered that part of it, and informed the Indians, that he had no power to determine ſuch matters, but that if any of the Head-men had any thing to add to what Malatchi had ſaid upon other heads, he was ready to hear them.

WOLF King. What the king has now ſaid is our talk: We thought indeed, that the Red coat King might have ſpoke ſomething, but he is very old.

OAKFUSKEE Head-Warrior. As your excellency recommended to us to be at peace with the Cherokee's, we came down with a free heart, and are glad to ſee your excellency. Here are the head-men for our nation. Here is the king, and there is the old Red-coat king of the Oakfuſkee's; all the head warriors readily complied with every thing you deſired of us; and as for my part, I never ſhall be the man that will ſtand out againſt any good talk; but the peace was agreed to not as being your deſire only, but the headmen all conſidered that the thing was good for them, and was for our good; notwithſtanding we have loſt ſome of our people ſince, yet I hope the peace will laſt: The kings and beloved men are come down with one heart, and as double you have the ſame cuſtom among you to have your beloved men about you, and we, the warriors, are come down to eſcort them.

You are pleaſed to obſerve, that the firſt thing to be done is to renew the treaties between us, and it is chiefly upon that account that we came down. We hope we have never violated any treaty, and they are now renewed. The day ſhall never come that it ſhall be ſaid, that we had any thoughts of throwing away the Engliſh, but that there ſhall be always a firſt friendſhip between us: We depend upon them as friends, and without doubt it is the deſire of the great King George, that we ſhould live in friendſhip and eat and drink together, and he ſhall be my conſtant opinion, that nothing bad can come from the Engliſh, notwithſtanding any little matter that may be told. As to the affair of the peace with the Cherokee's, notwithſtanding the king has expreſſed himſelf fully on that affair before, yet I ſhall ſpeak a word to it.

I was rejoiced to hear that we were to meet, and was in hopes of ſeeing the Cherokee's here, and I ſhould be glad to know the reaſons why they are not come? It is not for want of power or will, that we did not reſent the injuries that we received from time to time after the peace was propoſed. For my own part I live in a frontier town, and am willing to go out to hunt for ſkins, but we do not know how matters are at home; but I hope we ſhall hear good accounts when we return, and our men expect to have good accounts from us of what we came about.

There are the two great men who agree to peace or who order war; had it not been for them it would have been impoſſible to have reſtrained the warriors; but they are men of ſuch prudence that we agree to what they deſire us: No doubt the Cherokee repreſent to the governor, that the Creeks always break the peace, but it is wrong, for the Cherokee's are always the aggreſſors.

I am now to ſay ſomething to your excellency, which I hope you will attend to: The king has ſpoke what was neceſſary upon other heads, and what I am to ſay: But after all the trouble you have taken, we fear it will prove ineffectual.

caſſicoes at the ſame rate, a blanket 6 lb. two yards, a man's ſhap 1 lb. a hoe 3 lb. a pair ſilver bobs 1 lb. a belt 1 lb. 2 knives for 1 lb. a pair of ſhoes at 1 lb. which uſed to be 4 lb. 2 pair of leggars 1 lb. of rum 25 lb. leather.

GOVERNOR. I have given great attention to all that has been ſaid, but chiefly to what was ſpoken by the king, for that was the great buſineſs you came about. I ſhall alſo take notice of what was ſaid by the other perſon, tho' what he ſaid was without any direction from the nation. I muſt obſerve to you, that many of the traders whom you now ſee, have been long traders in your nation, and ſeveral of them are rich; and I preſume that you think it reaſonable, that they ſhould not only have a proviſion for life, but alſo be able to ſave ſomething againſt they grow old. But if the trade is lowered that it muſt be the caſe, they will hardly be able to pay for their goods, the conſequence of which I am afraid will be, that you will have no traders at all among you, for the merchants in Charles-Town will not truſt for their goods. I deſire you may conſider the great fatigue in carrying up goods, and beſides the fatigue they are at great charges; they muſt have number of ſervants and horſes for that purpoſe, they are alſo great ſufferers, as the goods are often damaged in the carrying up, the guns are broken, and the leather they receive in exchange for their goods ſometimes gets wet and is ſpoiled in coming down: However I will conſult with my beloved men, what is proper to be done in this matter.

As to the behavior of your nation it is very good and when any miſchief is done by ſome young men we are very far from laying that to the charge of your nation; we acquaint you of it, and expect you will make ſatisfaction or puniſh them for ſuch outrages. In the caſe that I have recommended, you have done your part, you have puniſhed the guilty, and while you continue to do ſo, you may be aſſured of our friendſhip, and friendſhip of the Engliſh.

I am very glad you ſo readily agree to a peace with the Cherokee's as my deſire but it is to me an equal pleaſure to hear, that you are ſenſible that what I recommended is for your own good.

If a father could ſee two of his children fighting and ready to kill one another, and ſhould be unconcerned and not endeavour to part them, he would be deemed a very unnatural parent——The great King George

George looks upon the Indians that are in friendship with him as his children, and therefore has sent me orders to make peace.

It is very true, the Cherokee's accuse you as the first breakers of the peace, and perhaps not altogether without reason. You must remember, that about 4 years ago, when I had made a peace betwixt you and them, and both sides had agreed to it, and when most of the head men of your nation were met at the Ockoys town, to consult about coming down to ratify it in my presence, that the Indian called the Acorn-ill Raiser, a noted headman in your nation, pass'd by with a party of his men against the Cherokees, being bribed thereto and set on by the French captain of the Halbama fort &c. I was informed, in order to spoil the peace: and tho' most of your headmen used all their interest to prevent him, yet he could not be prevailed upon to stay, but went against the town of Ingle-wessee, and killed two of the Cherokee's, and brought their scalps to your nation: Mr Chartier who was there, wrote me a letter to this purpose, and also Mr. Shuldars and some others of the traders, and I suppose you yourselves remember it very well.

CHARLES, to the Indians. Yes, we remember it, it is very true.

GOVERNOR. The Cherokee's however came down, and thought it better to put up with the loss of those men, than by taking revenge to perpetuate a war.

The peace that I have now proposed betwixt you and them, is at their desire, and I have reason to think that as they are very desirous of it: It is very true they permitted some gangs of Northern Indians, your enemies, to pass down their country to war against you, but they alledge that they come in such numbers that they are unable to prevent it; however, they have requested them not to go against you, and have also tried to give them scalps to induce them to return home, but without effect: one gang however that came lately to Keowee, were told by the people of that town, that they were now in peace with your nation, and that they look'd upon you as brothers, and therefore, if they offered to go to war against you, they would immediately send runners to give you notice of it, which obliged them to return back: And I must observe to you, that many of these Northern Indians are looked upon to be rogues by the Cherokees; they think they cannot trust them, which is one of the reasons that they did not come to meet you upon this occasion, for they observe, that they seldom leave them, but that there are one or two of the Cherokee's missing, and they find next day that they have been killed here by their towns.

We take notice that two [illegible] killed some time ago near the Congarees; it is very true that two English men were killed there, but I need not be put in mind of this by Indians; I never lose any of my people but I will have satisfaction for it, and upon the first information that I had, that the Cherokee's were suspected, I immediately sent to demand satisfaction from them; this occasioned a great meeting of the headmen, and the party who had been out and were suspected to have done this mischief, were sent for, and examined one by one, and tho' they were questioned separately, yet their accounts were perfectly uniform, and gave not the least room to the headmen to conclude that they had been guilty of it; however they came to an unanimous resolution, that if it should afterwards appear, that any Cherokee had committed that fact, he should be put to death for it, tho' it should be the greatest man in the nation.

And to satisfy you that we never pass over such offences, and that we always demand satisfaction from all persons, I shall give you a short history of what happened in the Cherokees within these few years, in regard to such an affair.

A notorious headman, being a little in liquor, happened to kill an English man, and tho' he was a man of note, a pack horse man, and a very drunken fellow, yet I wrote up to that town to demand the life of that headman; they at first declined giving satisfaction, saying that there was no equality between so great a man as he and the man that was killed; but I held at the same time writings and several of the other towns, telling that they should take care that due satisfaction was given, and the headmen finding that the town resolved to give it, or else that they would come against their town, and kill the women and child, and destroy their towns to the ground which they came to a resolution to put him to death, and they ordered one of his own relations to do it, and the place fixed for that purpose was the town-house where he came to see the dancing, as they commonly do every night, and for that end the executioner had provided himself with a pistol, which he kept concealed under his blanket, but by the motion of dancing the bullet had dropt out, however he wounded him mortally with the pistol and ordered him to prepare for the death he had committed, and finding that his life was aimed at for satisfaction to the English, immediately fled into the woods, and hid himself in a hollow tree, but the whole town having gone in pursuit of him, found him, and having dragged him out by the heels, cut off his head with a hatchet; his relations then desired, that they might have leave to bury his dead body, but the rest refused their request, telling them, that it should lie above ground and rot, that the English might see how faithfully they observed their treaties, and they sent for some of our traders to be witnesses of it.

We shall expect the same from all Indians; and as I have already told you, when any of my people murder any of the Creek's, they shall certainly suffer death for it, and I will send for some of you to see the punishment: This is the way to preserve friendship between us.

I have done at present, but I will consider what more may be proper to say to you against our next meeting, and you shall then hear it.

LONDON, April 10.

BY a private letter from Amsterdam dated the 2d, we are informed, that the Dutch will employ 118 ships this year in the Whale fishery: and that from Hamburgh, Altona, Bremen and Embden they propose to fit out 19.

London, April 17. William Shirley, Esq; governor of New-England, is appointed governor of New-York, and will in a few days embark for the said government.

Genoa, April 17. On the 24th of last month M. de Cursay embark'd at St. Fiorenzo on board the Fleur Imperiale, and all the French troops on board the other transports; having Corsica in more confusion than they found it.

Dublin, April 21. Last friday, saturday, and sunday se'nnight, Mrs. Byrne of the new inn near Clancurry, was delivered of three boys and two girls, four of which children were baptized; and Mrs. Byrne is in a fair way of doing well.

London, April 28. Yesterday's letters from Cowes advise, that the Capt. and people of the Assurance man of war, lately run ashore at the needles, are saved, and that the ship is like to be lost. Governor Treslawney and his lady were passengers, and got safe to shore at Yarmouth. It is added, that all the money on board, amounting to about 60,000 l. (except two bags of dollars, to the amount of about 480 l. Sterling, supposed to be stolen) was saved.

London, May 5. Among the many regulations intended for the island of Jamaica, there is one for the easier recovery of debts, and speedier trials at law.

London, May 10. It is reported, that his majesty will visit his German dominions next spring, on affairs of great importance.

We hear, the [illegible] parliament will sit [illegible] the middle [illegible] March following, be dissolved, when a proclamation will be issued for chusing a new one.

London, May 12. Thursday the lords of trade and plantations met, and agreed that an additional number of forces be sent to Nova Scotia and Georgia, and ordered the same to be laid before his majesty.

Thursday was held a board of admiralty, when all the lords were present, and we hear that orders were sent to Deptford, Woolwich and Chatham to expedite the ships upon the stocks, and employ an additional number of hands for that purpose.

London, May 15. On thursday a proclamation was issued, forbidding all the king's subjects to give any assistance to the inhabitants of the island of Corsica, upon pain of his majesty's high displeasure, and suffering such punishment as the law directs to be inflicted on those who wilfully violate his majesty's treaties.

By certain advices from Constantinople, which may, if any can, be depended upon, the double preparations for a war in Asia and in Europe, were only a feint, and there is too much reason to believe the Porte is inclined, or rather forced, to turn her arms against the christians.

London, May 17. On monday last his excellency gov. Thomas set out from his house in Soho square, for Portsmouth, attended with a grand retinue, in order to embark for his government of the Leeward Islands with the first fair wind, on board his majesty's ship Shoreham, which has been ordered round thither by the lords of the admiralty for that purpose.

We hear that Sir d'Arcy Osborne, bart. knight of the shire for Bedfordshire, is appointed governor of New-York, and sets out soon for the government of that place. [Either Mr. Shirley is not appointed as this gentleman, or the printer may have mistaken New York for New England.]

CHARLES-TOWN, July 28.

This Day sail'd the Lark, Capt. Read, for Philadelphia, in which Vessel embark'd, Andrew Belledge and Thomas Boone Esqrs.

Yesterday arrived a Vessel from Ireland, with a Number of substantial Protestant Passengers, who intend to settle themselves in this Province.

We hear, that the Magistrates intend to go about once a Week, to examine the BREAD baked in this Town. And that the Fire Masters will soon make an Inquiry, whether there are any Houses unprovided with Buckets and Ladders.

In the 2d Column of the 1st Page, dele the three last Words of the 16th Line, viz. is a cask.
